A really fun car to drive. Get your hands on this soon to be classic today. Ford of Australia produced a Mazda Miata rival named the Ford Capri in 1989, which was ironically based around many Mazda 323 mechanicals. From the 1991 model year, this car was sold in North America as the Mercury Capri. The car was sold until the 1994 model year. Very few were made, and even fewer have survived. This collector's car will make any enthusiast's dream of an affordable pleasure cruiser into an entertaining daily driver that definately gets looks.

The production Capri was based on the successful 1983 Ford of Europe, Fiesta-based Ghia-designed 2-seat convertible called the Barchetta (little boat). The Capri exterior was styled by Ford's "Ghia" design studio. The engineering, the interior & folding roof were done by "Ital design" an Italian engineering/design firm. The chassis was a modified Mazda 323, mechanicals (engine, transaxle, brakes, suspension & steering) were also from a modified 1988-1990 Mazda 323, manufactured & supplied by "Mazda Motors", a Ford Asian partner. So even though styled by Italians, built by Australians, with Japanese mechanicals, the majority of production was for the US market.

If mechanical work, or body work is desired, we can service the vehicle at a later date when convient. The Capri is drivable today. Feel free to contact us any time for a test drive. Also we can work out a payment deal (no interest) if full payment is a problem.
